In Husserl's hands, consciousness, a usually inscrutable topic, is woven into a rich and detailed tapestry. Consciousness is directness towards an object (be this object physical, an idea, a prior conscious act) together with a dense network of other objects towards which the directness may turn, and sets of modifications of the conscious act that the subject can freely take up and lay aside.

The Idea of Phenomenology. In this fresh translation of five lectures delivered in 1907 at the University of Göttingen, Edmund Husserl lays out the philosophical problem of knowledge, indicates the requirements for its solution, and for the first time introduces the phenomenological method of reduction.

The Idea of Phenomenology by Edmund Husserl

The Idea of Phenomenology, which consists of five lectures that Husserl delivered in Göttingen in 1907, comes from perhaps the most important period in his overall philosophical development. For although in 1912 Husserl could refer to his Logical Investigations of 1900–1901 as constituting the “breakthrough” of phenomenology, after the publication of this magisterial work Husserl entered ...
